

L B M

March 13, 1973

on this problem and isolate it section by section, and if one of these things, if we can accomplish this in this program, if we can isolate this problem and pinpoint down the responsibility for the lack of law enforcement in connection with the field of drug abuse I would heartily support this. Now I notice and I have been watching this over the years, that generally the people who get arrested in drug raids are generally people in the community, younger people in the community, both male and female, ranging anywhere from not less than 14 years of age, probably some younger on up and when they, after the publicity gets, dies down and the heat and the fury dies down, and these people come to trial, generally they get a slap on the wrist and that is the end of it, and I believe this is one of the basic reasons that we have this problem. I don't believe it has been in the, I know it has not been in the investigation, and I doubt whether it has been in the prosecution alone, I think a lot of this rests with the Judiciary in that they will not, just simply will not, cannot bring themselves any more to do anything about the confinement of the drug pusher and the drug peddler, the drug salesman, the corrupter of people, and all that goes with it. A drug pusher can turn a youth

(End of Belt #7)