

prestige was on the line, and Fred Conley won 60 to 40, then my prestige, obviously, was vindicated. And he can't get a job with them now. Is there anybody else? There's a group called the Mad Dads, loved by white people. Talk about doing things to fight drugs in the community, tricked the state out of a $50,000 grant and misspent that. Then went on television saying, we don't know how to spend this money. Yet John Foster, the Vice President or whatever his job is, has been Vice President of the city employees union for I don't know how many years, and he doesn't know how to spend money. Eddie Staton headed the...what is it called now? It's an office in Omaha under the mayor...oh, the Human Relations Department, headed that for years, had a budget, and had other jobs where he dealt with money, and want to say that since they don't know how to spend money, the state, instead of holding them to responsibility for the money they got, should have helped them know how to spend it, and they should not be criticized. When these white individuals and groups continue to try to come into our community and foist these crooks, these self-seekers, these Uncle Tom's, these fools on our community and say they are role models, we have a responsibility to stand against that. And I hope that what happened last night will teach the "Repelican" Party, will teach the First National Bank, and all these other white groups that tried to come into our community and dictate, and say they know better for us what we need than I, a representative, know, who want to challenge me through a surrogate, because they're afraid to challenge me head-on, need to realize that in the same way that those with a western philosophy do not understand the Arab mind or the Middle East situation, these white people don't understand our community. The First National Bank endorsed the drug dealer, the World-Herald endorsed the drug dealer, the Omaha labor union endorsed the drug dealer, and the Omaha police union endorsed the drug dealer. The only problem is that none of them carry any clout in our...

SENATOR WARNER PRESIDING

SENATOR WARNER: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...community, and the drug dealer lost. And in case the people from the First National Bank don't tell their little flunky, their little Uncle Tom, their little cowardly puppet what I said, if any of you all know him, you all tell him that he should not issue a challenge to Fred Conley to meet him in that alley when he had every opportunity to attempt to do to
