would be a determination of the assets of this now dissolving union.

SPEAKER KRISTENSEN: But you're talking about income, Senator Coordsen.

SENATOR COORDSEN: Um-hum.

SPEAKER KRISTENSEN: That's the income share.

SENATOR COORDSEN: Yeah, but that's income that's available to you within minutes. Within minutes...

SPEAKER KRISTENSEN: Well...

SENATOR COORDSEN: ...you could divest yourself of that...

SPEAKER KRISTENSEN: Sure.

SENATOR COORDSEN: ...stock.

SPEAKER KRISTENSEN: Just as quick as I could sell my piece of property.

SENATOR COORDSEN: And sell your farm and everything.

SPEAKER KRISTENSEN: Sure.

SENATOR COORDSEN: And that's where we all seem to be missing the boat on this particular issue. Number one, there are very few people with a legitimate district court division and a legitimate child support determination that measures both the needs of the child and the resources of both parents. What is it, the district court figures over 90 percent of child support orders are collected without any problem. What we're talking about, though, quite fundamentally, are those in which the court has...individual members of the court have seemed to do not a very good job and needs a little more direction than what they seem to be getting. Now, whether it's Senator Crosby's bill or something, but there seems to be, based upon actually cases that have went clear to the State Supreme Court in this area where the noncustodial parent actually had custody of the child and
