up or a no-true-bill, which means no indictment. When the bill was before us the last time I emphasized that the changes that were being proposed to the law apply prior to entering the deliberations that dealt with whether or not an indictment would be brought back. That's what the language says. But to take away any misgivings, this portion of the amendment would strike those words. That's the easiest part. That's not to say any of the rest of it is difficult, but since it's only three words involved, I can deal with the three easier than I can the others. Now the rest of this amendment is based on a committee amendment that had been offered to LB 73, another grand jury bill. That bill had a provision which stated that whenever a person dies at the hands of a law enforcement officer while in custody or being apprehended, or a person would die while in detention, a grand jury must be convened. The changes that I was proposing would have required the first thing the appointment of a special prosecutor. Because of the fact that the county attorney works day in and day out with the police, it is better to remove even the appearance of a conflict. So a special prosecutor would be appointed in those instances. The second part would require the convening of a grand jury within 30 days of a certification by the coroner that one of these types of deaths had occurred. This is necessary because there have been instances where too much time elapsed between the incident itself and the impaneling of a grand jury. This portion had raised no controversy, no questions. Even those who spoke against the bill in its original form agreed that expeditious handling of these matters is in everybody's best interest. The third portion, which drew the controversy from law enforcement, would have named the State Patrol as the outside agency that would conduct the investigations. Even the Patrol did not want this responsibility. Person power, other political considerations even entered into it. So a representative of the Police Officers Association, last name Grabowski, Senator Brashear, who is the Chairperson of the Judiciary Committee, myself, and other people in law enforcement discussed how we could come to grips with this aspect of the bill. During the hearing a balloon was floated, based on the idea of a multijurisdictional force, meaning that the agency which employed the officer who did the killing would not be the ones in charge of the investigation. So they agreed that if a multidisciplinary or jurisdictional group could be put together,
