FLOOR DEBATE

LB 461

SENATOR BEUTLER: Senator, that's right. I have omitted...I omitted that piece of information and should not. This is exactly as it came out of committee.

SENATOR HILGERT: And the second question I have is on Section 5, and I'm sorry but I'm doing a little shorthand here. I'm reading from the Committee Statement as a reference. It talks about, let's see, allows the Department of Environmental Quality to issue a certificate of completion stating no further remedial action needs to be taken at the site. A very basic question, trying to understand this issue, it's either cleaned up or it isn't, and I assume, from what your description is, is that there's been a problem that they have attempted remediation but that has failed to be properly defined as far as when it...when it's done? I mean I understand the need of finality in these procedures in order to get the property into the market, et cetera, and engage in the financial institutions. You need...you need to have some finality, when is the beginning; when is the end. But is the problem...you have a real problem with is this piece of dirt clean enough, because it's been contaminated, and we artificially are making a judgment through a certification process because it's not obvious on its own merits whether it's clean or not? Can you address that?

SENATOR BEUTLER: Yeah, Senator, it's not changing any of the standards that the Department of Environmental Quality has, so whatever the current standards are for remedial plans and the degree of cleanup that's necessary in a particular location, and that may vary somewhat depending on the use of underground water, the location within the state, the closeness of population, the...

SENATOR HILGERT: Okay.

SENATOR BEUTLER: ...sparsity of the state.

SENATOR HILGERT: So, if...

SENATOR BEUTLER: But, in any event, whatever...whatever
