of his or her choice. You're giving them a choice that the rest don't have. I mean I can't quite understand. If a person really wants, it seems to me, they're disenfranchising themselves if they're not willing to prior, at two weeks ahead of time, indicate which ballot they want. That's what they're after. They don't have to tab themselves as Republican or Democrat except to get the ballot. If they want to really be on the ballot it seems to me...or get to vote, all they have to do is declare which ballot they want. What I object to is coming in that day and say, well, what am I going to be today? Am I going to be a Libertarian? Am I going to be Nebraska party? Am I going to be Republican or Democrat? It seems fairly loose to me in terms of your philosophy, your conscience, or whatever. And...

SENATOR WICKERSHAM: Okay.

SENATOR WEHRBEIN: ...I...we probably shouldn't engage in an argument.

SENATOR WICKERSHAM: No, no, that...

SENATOR WEHRBEIN: I guess I'm...

SENATOR WICKERSHAM: No, that's fine.

SENATOR WEHRBEIN: You may reply.

SENATOR WICKERSHAM: All right. I think maybe there was a little bit of confusion based on something that I think that Senator Smith was saying that I believe was inaccurate. If you have registered as a Democrat or you have registered as a Republican, you can't walk in and claim a ballot for the other's primary. It's only if you're an unaffiliated voter.

SENATOR WEHRBEIN: Yeah, and I could...

SENATOR WICKERSHAM: It the only...it's only the unaffiliated voters that have the option. It isn't somebody who has registered for the Democratic primary or someone who has registered for the Republican primary.
