FLOOR DEBATE

April 2, 2002 LB 1211

recall again that the acquisition agency is the group being formed for the purpose of, as I understand it, as Senator Bromm responded positively, for the purpose of doing the financing and doing the construction. And I asked Senator Bromm, well, where in the bill does it show that the state sits on the board of the acquisition agency? Where does the state get input into this construction and into this money being spent? What if a design change comes through, and they want an additional $10 million for the design change, or things don't come through as anticipated in terms of costs, and the decision is between doing a smaller system or doing a more elaborate system and paying more? How does the state control those decisions? And I think the answer is that the state cannot control those decisions. I think if I'm correct about the structure of the bill, and Senator Bromm is back so I will ask him, but if I'm correct about the structure of the bill, there are no state participants on the board of the acquisition agency. And that's done because...

SENATOR CUDABACK: One minute.

SENATOR BEUTLER: ...I'm guessing, because the state can't be involved in the issuance of the bonds. Well, that's fine, but maybe we need to figure out some other kind of system where the state has more controls or add provisions where the state has more controls rather than being put in a box like we are, and having to agree to an acquisition agency where we have no representation. I would be particularly disturbed about having no representation if it turns out that what the state is going to pay into this system might well be a majority of the costs. We haven't heard anything yet about how the state is going to be protected by fair participation by political subdivisions. And therein lies another major problem in the bill...

SENATOR CUDABACK: Time.

SENATOR BEUTLER: ...is that it...did you say time, Senator?

SENATOR CUDABACK: Time. I said time, Senator.

SENATOR BEUTLER: Okay. Thank you.
