FLOOR DEBATE

April 3, 2002 LB 1021

SENATOR BYARS: That is correct.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: And they will get more money for a rigid container than they will for a body bag, is that true?

SENATOR BYARS: I can't answer that truthfully. You know, if a body bag would be made out of leather and was handstitched, it could be more expensive than a piece of cardboard supported by wooden lath.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: And we don't know that they mean cardboard.

SENATOR BYARS: No, we don't.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: It's whatever the one who is going to burn up this corpse will offer as a container in which some remains that are to be burned will be placed.

SENATOR BYARS: That is correct and I assume that as the language is written, that that would be a choice of the individuals who are making the agreement to have the remains cremated.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: But what the state is being asked to do is give these burners containers by definition in the statute which will compel somebody who wants to burn up a corpse to use this container. So let me ask you this question: can the family or the individual who wants to burn up the corpse or could the one who, prior to becoming a corpse, provide his or her own container? Is that allowed under this statute?

SENATOR CUDABACK: One minute.

SENATOR BYARS: Okay. The family...the family makes the decision on what type of container is used. That could be done prior to your expiration, Senator, or could be made by the family after your expiration.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: But must it be one provided by the crematorium operator or an undertaker?
