and Vietnam, and a thousand firefights around the world, and the economic exhaustion of the Soviet Union were all part of one war. And just because those who fought in Vietnam lost a battle...in that war, they didn't lose the war. They were part of winning the war. Vietnam was a part of exhausting the communists and the communist system, and they shouldn't be looked upon the way that they are. They should have the same honor as the World War II veteran, or as the Korean veteran who fought, in my opinion, in the same war they were fighting in. And that maybe one way to heal is to start honoring them as winners, as part of the forces that won the Cold War, and stop looking upon them differently. They deserve a higher place.
