LB 914 changes penalties relating to the duty to stop after a motor vehicle accident. Current law provides that a court shall order a person not to drive a motor vehicle for a year, if they violate the provisions requiring a person to stop after an accident. The bill makes it permissive so that a court may order a person to not drive for a period of up to one year. The bill also requires the revocation of the license for the period of time that a person is ordered not to drive.

The Department of Motor Vehicles indicates that licenses of persons who are convicted of these violations are currently revoked, so the bill will not have a fiscal impact in terms of additional revenue from the reinstatement of revoked licenses. It is possible there could be decreased revenue from revocations if a judge opted not to revoke driving privileges at all, in which case DMV would not revoke the violator's license. The fiscal impact cannot be determined because actions by judges are not known.
