but it makes the required services of the veterinary those midnight deliveries and problem cases only. Not only that, but tending poodles and painting toenails is if not equally profitable more so and you can do it from nine to four in your office and have none of the inconvenience and difficulty of large animal service. Now establishing a veterinary school in this state is no more going to guarantee large animal veterinaries in the field than the fact that we have a medical school in this state does. We are scratching and clawing and trying to devise a way to get the graduates of our own Nebraska Medical School to practice rurally and we have failed utterly in doing so. What then makes any one think that having a veterinary school in this state is going to encourage veterinaries to move into the small rural areas and engage in a service that is at best a difficult life. Now I don't doubt for one minute that the Regents in their wisdom who created the Centennial campus when they should have been thinking in terms of veterinary medicine would love to have another school. I do have concerns about building it here in Lincoln. I think about one more structure on that University campus and the soil footings are going to collapse and the whole thing is going to drop out of sight. Before we engage in enlarging a campus that is struggling and becoming more expensive every year, I think we should be about ordering our priorities over there. Let's empty a building and put veterinary medicine in that building but there is no indication that I can find that a veterinary school in this state is going to improve in any way the supply of large animal veterinaries rurally. We cannot mandate it. We can in no way limit their service and the track record in Kansas and other schools proves that at least fifty percent of the students who do attend those schools leave their states.

SPEAKER MARVEL: You have one minute, and about thirteen minutes on the bill.

SENATOR MURPHY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I do not need that minute.

SPEAKER MARVEL: You have fifteen minutes left and I have Senator Rumery and Senator Beutler and Senator Vickers. If you each take five minutes, I will have to cut off at the end of the second speaker. So I don't know how else to do this. Senator Rumery.

SENATOR RUMERY: Mr. President, members of the Legislature, we have been hearing considerable information recently and now into several years where we talk about consumerism
