

491 passed. So the Fowler amendment was a pretty major amendment. At least it has told the Banking Department, the big banks and everybody, hey, you know, don't count on 491, don't count on special legislation, go act like you have in the past and process applications. But as the Wesely amendment and other amendments come up, I am concerned that we are sitting here, and as I say, tailoring legislation for just one specific person or another and so I would ask Senator Wesely a series of questions. Senator Wesely. Senator Wesely, Jimmy Moylan, the independent bankers, did they want this particular amendment? Did they need it?

SENATOR WESELY: I haven't talked to Mr. Moylan. I don't know if the independent bankers (interruption).

SENATOR DeCAMP: He didn't ask you for the amendment, though, did he?

SENATOR WESELY: No.

SENATOR DeCAMP: Let's see, how about the Nebraska Bankers Association? The two groups I just mentioned now represent in total all the banks of the state. Did they ask you for it?

SENATOR WESELY: They accept it.

SENATOR DeCAMP: They accepted it. Is there any particular reason, maybe something we just don't see right on the surface of the thing, any particular bank that just absolutely needs this to make their system fly, maybe one little, one good-sized bank?

SENATOR WESELY: Not a goodsized but a.....

SENATOR DeCAMP: I think that is enough answers. What we are doing is we are playing the same old game but we are doing it on such major legislation. We are tailoring a specific thing so a specific person can get a specific branch in a specific place. We are now in the years, I have said, when we can deal with structure change and we can deal with it honorably, effectively and openly but we are not going to do it if ten of us are pressured and pushed into doing one specific thing for this bank, another twelve are put into a position of doing something different to hurt another bank. I urge you to reject the amendment and wait, whether it is ten days or two weeks or three weeks, until the banks sit down and work out responsible
