

SENATOR NICHOL: Proceed.

SENATOR HIGGINS: I think if you go to an attorney's office to get a divorce he ought to be listing on his wall the fact that if he loses the case, the man might get the children and the wife is going to get the football tickets. I think that when he takes a negligence case that he ought to be able to list to the fellow that when we go to court and we sue somebody for hitting you in your automobile, you might lose a week's time off your job without pay and there is no guarantee that I am going to win the case for you. So I think if we are going to go at legislation this year protecting everybody in every possible way, let's not just include one industry which everybody knows is having a very hard time staying alive today but let's take every industry including my own, the insurance agents, and make some consumer laws to protect the people from bad insurance agents and unscrupulous insurance contracts and let's do the same with the medical profession, make them list what the possibilities are every time they operate on you and what the percentages are that die from that type of surgery. I just think it is only fair to hit every possible industry if we are going to protect the consumer in every possible way. Automobiles are not the only thing that people purchase today. So when you consider this amendment remember all forty-nine of us might have an obligation to introduce some other bills next year to protect the public from every possible thing that can happen to them in every possible profession. Thank you, Senators.

SENATOR NICHOL: We have twelve people who wish to speak on this. Senator Kahle, you are next.

SENATOR KAHLE: Mr. President, members, I will make mine real brief, but I guess I am concerned about taking the lights and glass out of the inspection. This seems to be the problem that most of us have when we go to have an inspection that we've got either a clearance light, taillight, or headlight with a chip in it for the lights and then certainly they could be out of focus which really is as bad. You would rather have them out than have one that is out of focus that hits you right in the eye when you see a car. So I can't quite understand the logic in taking out the inspection of lights and glass and glass is another thing. We get a lot of complaints from people who have a small crack in their windshield and the inspection stations don't agree on whether it should be replaced or not but it is not just the windshield, the back glass door windows and in the winter time if they are not, I have seen them completely shattered or even people nailing a piece of cardboard up
