anything like that, the people that were liable for that and responsible?

SENATOR WEHRBEIN: Well according to the Supreme Court, as I said, all this has been through the Supreme Court and they said that those questions weren't asked right...that's my interpretation.

SENATOR SMITH: Who was supposed to be asking those questions right?

PRESIDENT: Time has expired. Senator Korshoj had some guests in the north balcony. They just left. We had 30 fourth grade students and their teacher from the Oakland-Craig Elementary School in Oakland, Nebraska. Senator Warner, your light is on next.   Senator Moore, followed by Senator Nelson.   Senator Nelson, would you like to speak next, followed by Senator Morrissey.

SENATOR NELSON: Senator Smith's question a little bit on product liability, I happened to have a very same almost thing happening in Grand Island and you can't believe it can happen but it did happen and almost the same thing and it went from the subcontractor back down to the main contractor and the main contractor has gone bankrupt and so it goes back to the individual people and then those people that had to put their houses up for bonding and it's a sad, sad story, but that's what has happened and the time ran out and so they go right on down the line, so I suppose it could go on down the line as far as we want to go here too. But I want to question Senator Wehrbein, if he would answer, please.

PRESIDENT: Senator Wehrbein.

SENATOR NELSON: Senator Wehrbein, have something similar to our veterinarian, I was going to stay out of this discussion here, have they investigated the possibility if there are only 200 students there to cooperate with other states and so on? I respect Senator Lynch, if this is all that we're going to and we're going to continue to provide instruction for every area, maybe this is the time to say that we need to rethink that.

SENATOR WEHRBEIN: Well, I can't answer that specifically.   I did consider this myself, not looked into it too seriously because I think that is a pretty decent sized college now at 200
