

doing is perceived. The Legislature is doing this. The Legislature is denying localities affected any meaningful part in the decisions that will affect their lives drastically. And this waste facility can drastically affect the lives of those who are presently in this world and those who will come into this world in the future. There have been in the past nuclear accidents and some things that are caused, called accidents, but were done on purpose by the government by way of experimentation, whose affects are just now being felt. And nobody knows how far in the future they will be felt. There is not adequate control of this entire operation by the Legislature. When we say the state, it ultimately boils down to the Legislature, because things are done pursuant to the laws that we enact. When we allow a great amount of discretion on the part of a group of people who are not amenable to federal law, state law, or any outside agency, the responsibility is ours for every deficiency, every negligent act, anything they do that can result in harm to the citizens of this state. This facility question is not one that we can answer today, then wash our hands of and say it's done, we're through with it. It's going to haunt us from now on. The least I felt that we could do is put those people, who are going to be affected to the greatest degree, in a position to say something about what is imminent in terms of befalling them. And we have decided that we're going to back off and not give them any meaningful voice. It's kind of interesting that this morning the Legislature, over the protestations of "Baron" Hefner, passed unanimously a resolution that injected the Legislature into a labor-management dispute over Goodyear. And we have people, like Senator Warner, who is called the "Dean", whose name was on that resolution and it about knocked my eye-teeth out and my socks off. That's not a position that you find a conservative usually taking, but it affects Lincoln, his constituency and other Lincoln senator's constituency. I guess I better be careful when I speak about Senator Warner, because the powers that be are messing with our electronics here.

PRESIDENT: I thought you had a scratch in your voice.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: No, (laugh) nothing personal meant, I'm only discussing this as we discuss each other on the floor, that's all, I promise. Now it is quiet again. There are Lincoln senators who are asking people from outside of Lincoln to vote money for the "Commonwealthians" who have lost money because of the failure of Commonwealth. So, when we're dealing with
