

SENATOR LAMB: Currently, there is too much reliance on property taxes...

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Okay, you are going to take my time. Let me ask you, does it give any relief to those who pay property tax on automobiles?

SENATOR LAMB: No, that is exempted from the bill.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Does it give any directed relief to those who pay income and sales tax?

SENATOR LAMB: No, that is not included in this bill. We have another bill that does that for income tax.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: But this bill is only for property tax owners and certain classes of personal tax, personal property taxpayers, right?

SENATOR LAMB: Right.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: So that excludes a number of taxpayers, doesn't it?

SENATOR LAMB: It does not include all the taxpayers in the state.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Do you feel it is fair to those who are excluded from receiving the relief?

SENATOR LAMB: I do because...

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Thank you, that is all, because I am short on time. I had talked about the Dalton brothers and Bonnie and Clyde as developing more and more as they take more people into it, a group of buccaneers who feel they have found Treasure Island in the state treasury, but they are not willing to share the booty with all of those who want a share of it, and I am surprised that Senator Hall, except that he is Chairman of the Revenue Committee, would go for some... (laughter) something like this and poor young vociferous Senator Moore detects some cracks forming in the fragile delicate alliance forged between the rural and the urban senators, and that is not who forged it. Calamity Jane cracked the whip and said, you boys, get over
