

and the citizens at large, also the black athletes at UN-L who partook in a demonstration against what was proposed to be a gathering for white Caucasians only. I thought all white people were Caucasians and I thought all Caucasians were white but, in keeping with the intellectual level of these types of people, they usually teach us something. But they took a very strong, unambiguous position against racism and its spread. I see racism fostered by the Historical Society. I see certain senators as being complicit by strengthening the hand of the Historical Society to do these terrible things and a voice has to be raised and Hanson knows where to find me. He can bully these women and bully some of these people on the floor of the Legislature but if he wants to try to put me in a condition where I'm merely remains, he knows where to find me. We get sick of this. The perfect thing to do would be to dig up some white people's bones and drop them on the steps of the Historical Society. I saw where some young white lads, probably taking their cue from some people in this Legislature, they called it violating or desecrating some graves in a Catholic cemetery, a few months ago, and when they were caught they were sentenced by the court as having committed a crime for doing what the Historical Society and some of the members of this Legislature indicate is all right if you do it to the native Americans. How are our young people to know what conduct is appropriate and what is to be condemned? We are dealing with an entire group of people who are being treated in the most contemptible manner possible. And I do find fault with those legislators who have emboldened the Historical Society and support them in what they're doing, then will stand on this floor at other times and pontificate on other issues about the purpose of education, the control of the university and all this other nonsense and it appears to be nonsense to me.

SPEAKER BARRETT: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: And somebody has to speak forthrightly on this issue. The people most intimately involved are not represented on this floor. They are not represented on any of the governing bodies that have any power in this state. It's up to the people who call themselves representatives of all the people who are supposed to be upholding principles of justice and decency to actually deliver on those promises. It is a fortunate thing that I don't convert my feelings into action in the same way that the Historical Society has converted its contempt for this Legislature, the Attorney General and the
