

controversial affairs of international import that took place during his administration, he forgot those, those were mere details. They handed him the Tower Report, he said, oh well, that's the first I have ever seen that. Didn't even know what it was. I watched this young man questioning the president and he would want the president to look at one of the exhibits and he had to ask the lady, I guess she was the court reporter, to point things out to him. And this is a tactic I'm going to use if I ever go to court. He looked like a statute. He just started looking down and sat that way for about 15 minutes. He didn't bat an eye. Well, he could have been asleep from the angle that it was, he didn't swallow. He just sat there and it looked like the camera was stopped. Then the young man cleared his throat, still no response. Then he said, uh, excuse me, Mr. President, do you see what I was talking about? And, under his breath he said, I'd rather not, but if you insist, I guess I did. And when the question was asked, he forgot that. But what he did not forget was everything that would tend to exonerate him. Memory crystal clear on all of those things. So with his selective memory he was allowed to escape. This is the man who, on so many occasions, would hold forth on the evil of abortion, who would talk about the necessity of prohibiting women from making that decision and having it carried out in a medical facility, the man who would speak against making available to poor women who had been victimized by rape or incest the facilities necessary to have them gain access to a legitimate, legal, constitutionally protected medical procedure. And now he has passed off the scene. He was replaced...oh, I heard he will be around again. He was replaced by George Bush, as Senator Hall says, a broccoli hater. Now he's against abortion and he's against broccoli. And there have been more people who have spoken out strongly against his antibroccoli position than have really of that stature spoken out against his position on abortion. They just kind of let him slide and they go after others. But George Bush said, on that issue, and this is why you ought to understand why a woman would want the right to have an abortion. He said, for eight years I was in the shadow of Ronald Reagan and I had to ride Air Force 2 and they had broccoli, and the first time they put that broccoli in front of me was when I made up my mind that I was going to be president and if I ever got to be president, I would ban broccoli from Air Force 2 and he kept his word. And there have been repercussions from that ever since the day he made it. I have seen full-page articles about him not going to eat broccoli and people are saying how he's giving children the wrong message. But there
