

SENATOR LINDSAY: The citizen, as a legal matter, yes, the citizen would have to provide the bond.

SENATOR MORRISSEY: And who decides what that bond will be?

SENATOR LINDSAY: The judge does, the trial judge. The...you have to look at it as a practical matter, also. And that's what I'm saying, on the practical matter US Ecology might appeal that closing decision, not because they think they'll win, but because they'll be able to operate another six, seven, eight months. Now on the flip side of that, as a practical matter, if Spence Morrissey appeals a decision, and the court...

SPEAKER BAACK: One minute.

SENATOR LINDSAY: ...requires a bond to stay that...to stay that decision, you may not have the money to post that bond. But you then have US Ecology making the decision, do we start dumping a bunch of money into this knowing that the Supreme Court may come back and reverse our decision?

SENATOR MORRISSEY: Dumping money into what, Senator?

SENATOR LINDSAY: To doing...to start the operations up.

SENATOR MORRISSEY: Okay.

SENATOR LINDSAY: Are they going to start...are they going to start into their operations, or take wha...do all the hiring of labor, paying labor, et cetera, if they know that there is a possibility, six, seven, eight months down the line the Supreme Court is going to come back and say, no, you're not properly licensed, shut back down, and try again.

SENATOR MORRISSEY: I guess they're taking that chance now, though, in construction. In California, they're putting up a lot of money, here they're only putting up 6 of the 20 or 30 million that they're going to need.

SENATOR LINDSAY: Well I'm not...

SPEAKER BAACK: Time.

SENATOR MORRISSEY: Isn't that the same thing?
