

have to not tell grandpa something that's none of his business anyway, but you're going to tell the wife to keep a secret from her husband. And she loves this man, even if he's a rat. Women seem to love rats even more, Senator Labeledz, for some reason. I don't know what it is, but they do. Maybe there's something extra attractive about them. But why should we ask her to keep this secret or, if the woman is abusive, why ask the man to keep a secret from his wife, and while trying to maintain the family unit we're passing a law...

PRESIDENT MOUL: Time.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...that will create a division.

PRESIDENT MOUL: Thank you, Senator Chambers. Senator Bernard-Stevens, followed by Senator Labeledz, Senator Nelson, Senator Rasmussen, and Senator Ashford. Senator Bernard-Stevens.

SENATOR BERNARD-STEVENS: Thank you, Madam President. Just a couple of comments. I was listening to Senator Labeledz, and then later Senator Lindsay's comments on the amendment. And I was intrigued. I guess I respect Senator Lindsay's comments, because at least he made an attempt to argue irrational opposition to an amendment based on a constitutional question that he felt. I can respect that. We differ on that conclusion, but at least that, to me, is a rational, though possibly not correct, attitude to take, if you are going to oppose an amendment. I did have some difficulty trying to follow Senator Labeledz's arguments. And quite honestly, Senator Chambers, you did not hear her incorrectly. That is what she said. Now I suspect she'll think about what she said and try to come up and, as President Reagan did many, many times, explain to the public what it really was that he meant to say when he did say what we know he...what we knew he said. So we'll hear the second version here in a couple minutes. But, basically, Senator Labeledz said the following things, which really intrigued me, in her opposition to the amendment. And one was that grandparents are taught, as I was taught, she said. And I was fascinated, because I wanted to know where that grandparent school is that they are taught these things. I'd like to enroll a few grandparents around into that particular class. There must be some place where in the world, that the grandparents that Senator Labeledz is aware of, that they all have these same value system. They all have the same way of handling families,
