

SENATOR ROBAK: Okay.

SENATOR HALL: ...that your local municipality is probably running, yes.

SENATOR ROBAK: It's not one of those machines that were declared illegal a few years ago that were run illegally that we have had to take out of all of our bars and clubs and everything else. It is not that thing come back to haunt us?

SENATOR HALL: Yeah, the kind that you take out every six weeks and put back in, yes, it's not...

SENATOR ROBAK: It's not that?

SENATOR HALL: No, it not. It's not a freestanding enterprise.

SENATOR ROBAK: Okay, it's just a plain old video keno game.

SENATOR HALL: That's all it is.

SENATOR ROBAK: Mechanical.

SENATOR HALL: Eighty numbers, 22 plays, that's it.

SENATOR ROBAK: And you would save the people that own these machines and the bartenders and so wherever they were at would not have to hire so many people to run them. Is that right? It would be easier for...they wouldn't have so much operating expenses. Is that true?

SENATOR HALL: No, these would not be...these would have to be operated through the local municipality, the local city, the local town who had voted on a keno. They would have to be in a single location where they operate a live drop-ball game. They wouldn't be able to be in bars, taverns, Kwik stores, any other kind of freestanding enterprise.

SENATOR ROBAK: I understand that but somebody has to operate these games, don't they?

SENATOR HALL: They would be operated at the same place where a live game is operating, where there is already staff crew on board that would be operating the local municipal lottery.
