

Mr. President, members of the body, since we're talking about money, Senator Moore brought me to tears, you know, when he was talking about how difficult it is for young people to have money. Have you ever walked through a mall? You people...you older people, like myself, I know you probably never get to a mall, but you ought to do that and see how these young people dress. You know, they've got those...they've got those bouncing tennis shoes and they've got those tee shirts and everything, and sweatshirts. Believe me, folks, they don't give those things away. And what's wrong with a young person making priorities as far as money is concerned? Everyone else has to, but they don't have the money to drive? There are a lot of ads all the time, they can go get a job at a fast food outlet. And there is no reason school should have to support driver training. But if they want to do it, they have a way of doing it. Their parents live out in the country, they made that choice, they're going to have to...they're going to have to come up with the money to put their children in driver education. So I think this is a good move. Thank you.
