

who die in a hospital and then apply those small numbers, or a terminal condition I should say, and who then become incompetent and then apply those small numbers, apply the roughly 15 percent figure that we can expect of those who sign living wills. We're not talking about a huge number of people. So the vast majority of people would be governed by Section 9. We're talking about a very small portion of those will be governed by the rest of the bill. So when we talk about it this is the amendment. This amendment is what you are going to affect the majority of the people in your district. It's not going to be that other 15 percent that signed the living wills. I would urge that we continue to debate the amendment. I would urge that the amendment be adopted and I'd invite anybody else to join the Landis-Lindsay show here.

PRESIDENT MOUL: Thank you. Senator Robak.

SENATOR ROBAK: Thank you, Madam President. Senator Lindsay, you almost put me to sleep and I almost forgot what I was talking about, there's been so many references to attorneys. Apparently you don't know my husband who is also an attorney who verbosity is not his long suit, he says A, B, C and that's it and leaves. And so I almost lost track of thought of what I was going to say when you were talking and I put my light on. You absolutely threw me off on another tangent, but that's your privilege. You were giving an instance like if your wife... would you repeat that to me again. I've forgotten in the last hour and a half, if your wife had a... if you or whatever.

SENATOR LINDSAY: Senator Robak, your husband probably does more flat fee billing than hourly rates like I do.

SENATOR ROBAK: No, he does more pro bono than any of you ever have done in your lifetime or will do.

SENATOR LINDSAY: I'm sure of that. To answer your question, the...

SENATOR ROBAK: That's why I had to go to work.

SENATOR LINDSAY: Yeah. Right now the spouse, if you look on the list, C, to use your husband's analogy, A, B, and C, A is somebody who has a...

SENATOR ROBAK: No, I want your scenario about what your wife
