

SENATOR MOORE: I would file that form in every county.

SENATOR HILLMAN: Yes, in...wherever you would...

SENATOR MOORE: Whatever county...

SENATOR HILLMAN: Yes.

SENATOR MOORE: Whatever county I'm paying any sort of property tax. And is that what...

SENATOR HILLMAN: Yes.

SENATOR MOORE: Okay, that's the last question, Senator Schmit.

SENATOR SCHMIT: Thank you again, Madam Chairman and members of the body. I think that what we are seeing here this morning is an attempt by Senator Hillman to try to increase the accountability of the program and, of course, in so doing it dramatically and tremendously increases the workload for the local county officials. I do not know exactly, someone...I think Senator Warner said the worksheets could be two or three pages. I have seen worksheets and programs substantially greater than that. If Senator Wickersham is on the floor, I'd like to ask him a question. I don't see Senator Wickersham, but he and I discussed that just very briefly. And I think it's very important to understand, and I think we are gradually working up to a point here where I hope many of you will conclude that the reimposition of the tax on personal property is not something which we will do casually, and it's not something which can be done by a stroke of the pen and automatically have everything fall into place. Senator Wickersham, would you tell me and the rest of the body a little bit about the amount of paper that's involved in those worksheets and how effective they've been, and what your reaction is to Senator Hillman's proposal?

PRESIDENT MOUL: Senator Wickersham.

SENATOR WICKERSHAM: Well, Senator Schmit, the amount of paper varies from business to business, depending upon how many items you have that are being depreciated. I have clients with several hundred items that are being depreciated, some of those items would represent property that would become taxable under 1063, some of those items are property that would not be taxable
