

how long I can hold out on the CA or the bill and see what I can get. I've got real problems with the bill. I've got real problems with the constitutional amendment and I've stated those time and time again. Now some people think I am playing a game, obviously. So because they think I'm playing a game, they say they won't listen to any ideas or any questions I have. They say they won't help me with language that they told me six weeks ago needed to be brought if the people that were to be guaranteed or at least partially guaranteed the ability to get a refund. No, it won't help, we're not playing your game. We're not going to try and straighten things out for some of these people. We're not going to listen. We've got the bill, this is it, this is the answer. Water tight, got armor on it, it will pass the railroads, it will pass the Supreme Court, it will pass everybody, this is the answer. Change the CA. No. No way. You want to make the results of the CA possibly better for the people if they vote it down? No, we prefer that we just go into the chaos we pretend we're trying to avoid. You don't stop listening, no matter where you think you are, no matter how much power you think you have. Low-level waste, they thought they had a lot of power, they still do, they stopped listening, they never listened. That's exactly what is happening now. I'm not playing games. I'm asking legitimate questions and I'm struggling with the long-term and short-term ramifications of the different decisions I have to make in the next few days. If you want to bring me to your side, to your camp, let me in the tent so maybe I can make some suggestions, you sure don't know how to go about it. You've been taking lessons from U.S. Ecology and the Compact Commission. You're arrogant, this is it and this is the only it in town. I think you need to continue to listen right until you get your 40 votes, if you get them, because if you don't...

PRESIDENT MOUL: One minute.

SENATOR MORRISSEY: ...you might die on 39. Thank you.

PRESIDENT MOUL: Thank you, Senator Morrissey. Senator Withem.

SENATOR WITHEM: Yes, rather than...rather than respond to Senator Morrissey's remarks, that could be left for another day to question as to what suggestions he has made on...to improve this bill, I have not been approached with any specific sorts of suggestions. I will address the issue at hand as to whether the Chair should be overruled or whether the Chair shouldn't be
