

would be.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Okay, so you can get 44 bushels of popped corn from one bushel of the popcorn, popping corn.

SENATOR SCHROCK: That is correct.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: All right, now if we put one cent per bushel on that raw product, then the consumer will not even feel it because that would be one-fortieth of a cent, no, there are forty bushels. The amount that the consumer would feel is so infinitesimally small, we couldn't even calculate it, could we? Would you answer that, Senator Schrock.

SENATOR SCHROCK: I think you're very correct although I don't know that you would raise much money at that rate.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: But it is a start, isn't it?

SENATOR SCHROCK: It is a start. Just for your information, the last time I went to a movie I think I paid $2.50 for a box of popcorn and I know the raw product didn't cost more than a penny.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Well let me ask you a different question then, since you raise the issue of movies. How about putting a five cent tax on every movie ticket sold instead of taxing soda pop?

SENATOR SCHROCK: If you would introduce that amendment I might support it, Senator Chambers.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Do you think there are people who may not be able to afford going to the movies who will nevertheless purchase a can or a bottle of soda pop?

SENATOR SCHROCK: That's very true. I don't consider soda pop a necessity of life, however. I consider it a luxury. It's something I enjoy and I'll probably continue to drink pop.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Do you consider movies a necessity of life or a luxury?

SENATOR SCHROCK: I consider it a luxury.
