

within...oil within the washing machine's motor and things like that, Senator Elmer.

SENATOR ELMER: I see, those things that are considered...Senator, those...so what you're saying then is that you could use these types of things as long as they don't consider...don't have as part of them a material that's considered to be hazardous?

SENATOR MORRISSEY: Yes.

SENATOR ELMER: Okay. So you have these hazardous materials and they can originate in other parts of the waste stream as well as in this type of a farm situation. And I understand that up to a very...a very...a small portion of this waste stream can contain some of those things like some scattered household hazardous materials, like an empty wasp killer can or something like that.

SENATOR MORRISSEY: Not that we're looking to dispose of in this way.

SENATOR ELMER: No, no, not in this way. I'm going to a more generalized...

SENATOR MORRISSEY: Yes, that would be allowed to go to the landfill, yes.

SENATOR ELMER: Okay, now those hazardous materials that cannot go to the landfills, do we have or address where we can take them in this bill? Or is there a place where we can now take them?

SENATOR MORRISSEY: There are places you can take them, yes.

SENATOR ELMER: Are they accessible to the people of Nebraska in a general way?

SPEAKER BAACK: One minute.

SENATOR MORRISSEY: I'm not sure that they are, Senator, no.

SENATOR ELMER: So...

SENATOR MORRISSEY: They are accessible but they are not cheap either.
