

SENATOR BEYER: Right now, similar boards now function with, there is three, let's see, similar boards now function with and for the Secretary of State in three other licensing functions. The history of these other similar boards has been useful and well-received by all in the industry and profession that they cover, but I am not sure which ones they are, Senator Chambers.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: So then that wasn't really an answer to my question.

SENATOR BEYER: I am not sure of the boards but there are three other ones.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Do you know whether they are set up giving the Secretary of State all these powers?

SENATOR BEYER: I believe they are...

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Since you don't know what they are, you must not know what they do either, right?

SENATOR BEYER: Right.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Okay, do you think it is good to give the Secretary of State all these powers when he has duties imposed on him by the Constitution?

SENATOR BEYER: Well, I think it has worked well for the others. I think it would work well here. If there is some other method to do it, I would be willing to listen to it.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: But if you don't know what the others are, how do you know whether they work well? You don't even know what they do. What makes you say they work well? Who told you that?

SENATOR BEYER: Well, this is just what I am going with with what the Secretary of State has written.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Oh, so the Secretary of State told you he is doing a great job on other things, so you ought to give him the power to do these things too, right?

SENATOR BEYER: Well, I think we have to take some of that with,
