not something...

PRESIDENT MOUL: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...which when they carry out this destruction they should be praised for. As a matter of fact, it should be a time of deep mourning but every time you turned on the news, if you would drive down certain streets, you would hear all the cheering and hollering every time they bombed a bridge, if they bombed a building, if they bombed an installation, and now you see that a lot of the things they were cheering for, when they saw it on television and the target was struck, where vehicles and individuals who were either Americans or parts of the allied countries, then suddenly the people who were doing all the praising and the cheering had an entirely different attitude. But if it is worthy of a reward, when you kill children of the Iraqis, then why is it not worthy of a reward when simply by mistake you wound up killing some other people? The name of the game is to kill and when you're killing on that scale, accidents will happen. That's no reason to condemn and criticize these people sent over there. You know this equipment is not perfect. You know that people who lay these plans are not infallible. There has never been a war on this scale where you bombed border to border without...

PRESIDENT MOUL: Time.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...innocent people being killed.

PRESIDENT MOUL: Thank you, Senator Chambers. Senator Haberman, followed by Senators Conway, Schimek and Chambers.

SENATOR HABERMAN: Call the question.

PRESIDENT MOUL: Senator, there's only been one person speak on these committee amendments themselves at this point.

SENATOR HABERMAN: Madam Chairman, I thought the debate by Senator Chambers and the rest of the members of this body covered the committee amendments very thoroughly. However, I will bow to your wishes and let it go.

PRESIDENT MOUL: Thank you, Senator Haberman. Senator Conway.

SENATOR CONWAY: Thank you, Madam President, and members, we're
