individual, separate farm, and they continue to get the subsidies, too. And this is how those welfare cheats gouge, the ones who are supposed to have that work ethic. The biggest cheaters on their income tax are farmers. The second biggest cheats are small businessmen. So there you go. They find all kind of stratagems. Senator Nelson, I read about farm situations, because from time to time I'm around farmers and I'm invited to talk to them and their groups. And I read a figure that was startling to me. The totality of farm subsidies is $30 billion. When you put all of the handouts that the farmers get in their welfare programs, it comes to $30 billion. And you know why this is so remarkable? There are fewer than 4 million people on farms throughout this country. Four million people raking in all of that money, handouts, welfare. And as I told the committee and I want to share with all of you, AFDC means Aid for Dependent Combines, and yet I don't see an uproar by Limberger and these other people saying cut that farm welfare. The farm welfare programs...

SPEAKER BAACK: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...encourage inefficiency. There is nothing in them which will reward prudent, wise husbanding of resources and their utilization. The World Herald knows so little about the agricultural community and supply and demand that they're happy when they see an over abundance of corn produced, when all it's going to do is drive down the price. But for the big dealers an over abundance of corn might be good, because the little peon farmers have to practically give it away to the big shots who are really going to make all of the money. So there are two levels on which the agricultural economy operates. One where the peons are who do the work and make precious little money, and the other level where the big shots make all of the money, where they will find it cheaper to import agricultural products from another country to undersell those in this country and drive the price that the farmer gets...

SPEAKER BAACK: Time.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...even lower, but it's welfare.

SPEAKER BAACK: Thank you, Senator Chambers. Senator Pirsch.

SENATOR PIRSCH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for Senator Chambers, if he would yield.
