

November 7, 1992 LR 1, 2

the Lincoln Star a week ago from one of E.J. Faulkner's colleagues, Herman Wiebers. And Mr. Wiebers says it all. If you just look and read what he says about E.J. Faulkner, there is nothing that I can add to it. He did so many things. He served in World War II, received the Legion of Merit. His command of the English language was a sight to behold and he wrote Christmas letters to his friends and colleagues every year that were masterpieces of the usage of our language and always had a strong spiritual and civic message for each one of us. So this morning I just ask...I know we all are thinking about other things, but Ed Faulkner might be a good person to think about this morning as we go into a session that's going to be difficult because he never shrank from his duty, nor any kind of distasteful job. He went in and did what he had to do with grace and charm always. So I finish with a little four-line piece of poetry from Thomas Hood. Peace and rest at length have come. All the days' long toil has passed and each heart is whispering, home, home at last. Ed Faulkner is home, and I will thank you very much for voting for this resolution this morning. Thank you.
