

land. And I guess this one is a little bit harder than others, and I have more of an inclination to support it because it deals with a situation where anger can arise, and not only can anger arise,...

SPEAKER WITHEM: One minute.

SENATOR BEUTLER: ...but it can arise in a situation where people are normally armed, where people are normally armed. And, you know, you do something like continually chase away somebody's birds, which is a legal activity. He gets...you know, he loses it. He turns around and he shoots somebody with a shotgun, and, you know, it sounds ludicrous, but you and I know there are lots of ludicrous situations out there that result in violence. And so I support the bill, but I think that's what is really happening.

SPEAKER WITHEM: Thank you, Senator Beutler. Senator Chambers.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Mr. Speaker and members of the Legislature, Senator Beutler and Senator Landis gave some very solemn and sober thoughtful discussion, of which, in my mind, this bill, itself, is not worthy. But a lot of times something which is totally worthless, as this bill is, will be the basis for significant things to be discussed. Now I'm going to go back to my level of discussion to ask Senator Elmer a question about his finely crafted bill, and which also validates the conclusions in that book called The Bell Curve. Senator Elmer, on page 2, in line 19, I see the word "fisher." Now I am not as well-acquainted with all of the fauna of Nebraska that some of my colleagues may be, but there is a creature known as a fisher, other than a human being. Am I right or wrong?

SPEAKER WITHEM: Senator Elmer.

SENATOR ELMER: There are a number of creatures that are fishers...

SENATOR CHAMBERS: No,...

SENATOR ELMER: ...and who live on fishes.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...who bears the name "fisher". I don't mean a human being, and that's the proper last name, but a creature known as a fisher, just like another creature is known as a
