of all the dangers associated with this work the first day that you're there?

SENATOR JANSSEN: Well I'll tell you what, Senator Chambers, I'd look things over awful close.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Okay, you're not going to answer the question, thank you, Senator Janssen. Here is what I will just declare, I will assert. When people come to work at a packing house there are many hazards. A person who comes to work there does not know of these hazards upon arrival. To have a situation...

SENATOR HALL PRESIDING

SENATOR HALL: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...where an individual can be harmed and nobody there to explain I think is a mistake. This amendment that I'm offering would make it clear what the role of this interpreter is. It is to give information and answer questions relative to the terms, conditions and daily responsibilities of employment. When there used to be unions they would have a steward who could be called to work out some of these situations and everybody spoke the same language. Where you have nobody who speaks that person's language I think it is a situation that requires some regulation by the state and to have an individual there who speaks the language I don't think is unreasonable. And I do believe that there are likely to be bilingual people there, sometimes multilingual people...

SENATOR HALL: Time.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...so this is not going to be a burden.

SENATOR HALL: Thank you, Senator Chambers. Senator Vrtiska, your light is next.

SENATOR VRTISKA: Thank you, Mr. President, members of the body, I'd like to ask Senator Chambers a question regarding this.

SENATOR HALL: Senator Chambers, you would respond.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Yes, I'll respond.
