

SENATOR CHAMBERS: And if the private hospital won't accept them, and the county hospital doesn't have to accept them, there always still would be the streets, wouldn't there?

SENATOR HALL: There always are the streets.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: And there are overpasses.

SENATOR HALL: And underpasses.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Which they could find their way to, perhaps, before they shuffled off this mortal coil.

SENATOR HALL: Correct.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Now, would the hospitals and the doctors be prohibited from providing a lethal dose of a chemical substance as the last act of kindness that they could give to one of these worthless, no-good people?

SENATOR HALL: Yes.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: All right.

SENATOR HALL: We still do not allow for aid in dying.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Oh, they couldn't do that.

SENATOR HALL: They could not.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: They couldn't even do that.

SENATOR HALL: Your question was, could they?

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Yes.

SENATOR HALL: I answered in the...you said they would not be able to, and I said yes. I answered affirmatively that they would not be able to.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Could we at least give them the power to do that, if somebody came in and asked for that kind of help?

SENATOR HALL: Well, that might not be germane to the bill, Senator Chambers, but I'm sure that legislation will be in here
