

not find that America is devoted to justice and liberty for all of us. Maybe if they said "all except" certain people, it would be all right. But what has to be done when these resolutions are brought of this kind that are this broad in scope is to look at what is happening in the world and in this country. The first thing they said when there was an explosion in Oklahoma City was they're looking for people of Mideastern derivation. A Jordanian-American, because of his complexion and his accent, was brought back from London to America, and they just arrested one of the white guys who is a suspect, and they were able to rent this van, the undercarriage of which was found at the explosion scene, didn't even have to show identification because they looked like they should be trusted, and you know what they looked like, except for the age and gender, they looked like you all, they were white. And who would suspect a white person of anything? And when the bomb was set off and now they believe these are the ones who did it, and believing they did it doesn't prove it, but they have evidence that connect them directly to it, it turns out that it's not anybody of my complexion. It's not anybody who speaks with a foreign accent, it's not somebody from the Middle East. These guys could have been men stationed at the military base right down there, because the people who leased them the van without even requiring them to show a drivers' license said, they looked like they could have been any of these GI's. So if you're white and you look all right, they give you the wherewithal...

SPEAKER WITHEM: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...with no suspicion to commit one of the worst atrocities that has been committed in this country. And when they thought it was somebody from the Middle East, as they said, Janet Reno went on television, we must seek the death penalty! Clinton said, this is one of the most evil deeds that was ever committed, thinking that it was not one like him. In Nebraska, a couple of years ago, black men were being sought because a white guy, who was doing something he had no business doing, ran off the road in a ditch and said he was pursuing some black men who were trying to put a 9-year-old white girl in a car, and they shot at him. And he lied, and they had cops coming from all over the country to Nebraska looking for these black men. And it turned out they didn't exist, that he lied, and he wound up being prosecuted. When the story was written from Norfolk, they mentioned that the white...
