

SENATOR SCHROCK: I'd just like to say it'd be economically impractical because the cost of enclosing an area like that would be beyond the resources of anybody in Nebraska that I know of, unless we're talking about whoever, the...I forget the man's name, the owner of Berkshire Hathaway. He might be...he might have enough money to be able to afford to enclose an area, but the type of areas we're talking about, you know, you can probably build a dome stadium over...a dome over the Memorial Stadium cheaper.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: But it's not against the law. That was the point I had... I had raised.

SENATOR SCHROCK: Not...

SENATOR CHAMBERS: It's not against the law.

SENATOR SCHROCK: Not that I'm aware of, but I can tell you one thing, it's not going to happen.

So, Senator Schrock, you saw what happened in the story of Noah to people like Senator Schrock but, Senator Schrock, the question a lot of us have always had when the flood came, everything was to be drowned except the ones that went on the ark two-by-two and seven-by-seven, what became of the fish? But that...I guess the fish hadn't misbehaved. At this point, I think all of you would have a copy of this amendment so I'm going to read it for you now. We would add a new section and, again, I attribute this to Senator Schrock. I meant he...he was the inspiration for this: "Any packinghouse shall be deemed a controlled shooting area and the owner of any packinghouse may, for a fee, permit any person to shoot or shoot at any of the four-footed animals on the premises. The Department of Economic Development shall promote this activity as a tourist attraction." Now this would make it even better. You wouldn't have to travel from a long distance. You could just jump in your car or bicycle or even jog over to the packinghouse and shoot at any of the four-footed animals that happens to happen along. You're going to kill them anyway. This is additional economic development. Senator Schrock had
