

coming in to shoot in the packinghouses, but I was particularly interested in the release of aggression so that perhaps instead of having buildings bombed and other things done perhaps we could have a little bit safer and saner and a little bit more understanding world if people would release their hostilities in less aggressive ways than they perhaps do sometimes. Anyway, I just rose to acknowledge the creativity in the amendment and I think it offers some real interesting promise. Thank you.

SENATOR BERNARD-STEVENS: Thank you, Senator Preister. Senator Hudkins.

SENATOR HUDKINS: Thank you, Mr. President and members of the body. Can't you just see the discussions around the barbecue out in the backyard or around the poker table in the local restaurant or the back room of the bar? Two big burly guys, or three or four are all sitting there having their glass of Kool-Aid and they're saying, oh, yeah, George, I'll tell you what I did last Saturday afternoon. I went down to the parking... the packinghouse and I shot myself four chickens and two cows, and the rest are saying, oh, that's really great. You know, I'm going to have to go out and do this too. I can hardly wait. But I do applaud Senator Chambers' attempt at humor, I guess is it. I hope he's not serious in this regard, but if he is we all know how we're going to vote. Thank you very much.

SENATOR BEKNARD-STEVENS: Thank you, Senator Hudkins. Senator Schrock.

SENATOR SCHROCK: I might vote for this amendment. Sounds like fun. But I do want to respond to one of your remarks, Senator Chambers. You said that we don't know what happens to the fowl after it is shot. I just can't recall ever hunting with somebody and not having them take the game home and properly dress it out and then use it as a food item, and I can tell you that the people that go to these controlled shooting areas, they take their pheasants home, they're dressed for them or they do it themselves and they feel they really have a delicacy. It's something you can't get every day and I can tell you pheasant is a delicacy and so I think the product of their hunt or the fruits of their labor in hunting is very well used afterwards. I don't think the game is wasted. So with that I'll close my remarks.

SENATOR BERNARD-STEVENS: Thank you, Senator Schrock. Senator
