

to add it into my reasons for being opposed to Senator Lindsay's withdrawing his amendment. We're going to spend the time. I would just as soon spend it on Senator Lindsay's amendment because I'm familiar with it.

PRESIDENT ROBAK: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: I've grown somewhat attached to it. If we let Senator Lindsay withdraw his amendment, then I've got to shift into another gear and bone up on an entirely different subject matter late in the day, late in the session on an issue which really is very serious and to some people more important than any other. So I'm acknowledging all that but I still intend to offer amendments and I intend to talk, talk, talk. If Senator Lindsay were here, I'd ask him one more question but since he's not...okay, he told me to look behind me. Madam President, how much time do I have?

PRESIDENT ROBAK: Ten seconds, Senator.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Is this my second or third time speaking?

PRESIDENT ROBAK: This is your second time, Senator. Thank you, Senator Chambers. Senator Witek.

SENATOR WITEK: Question.

PRESIDENT ROBAK: Senator, there's only one speaker left. There's only been two times speaking so I will say there's not been enough debate. Senator Chambers, this is your last time to speak.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: (Chuckle) Thank you, Madam President. Watch it. See, that's what happens. You go from domestic bliss to almost domestic violence but there's enough distance so that won't occur. And our disagreements are like those summer storms. They flash and they sound furious, but before the moisture hits the ground usually it has evaporated or just dried up, the sun comes out and nobody even knows that there was a disturbance of the elements. Right, Katie? All right. We have to let people know that we're trying to set an example for people of how these kind of disputes ought to be resolved. But Senator Hall had asked me the page number of the amendment that I was talking about with Senator Landis, and in case anybody else is interested, it would start on page 1472 of the Journal
