SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...can implicate me in this. I don't think the Executive Board ought to be doing it. I don't believe in anything that's going to take away the basic rights of the weakest senator in here. Not everybody's going to be forceful and aggressive like I am so they get bowled over. Some of them get tricked into offering amendments that they don't understand. Then they get abandoned out there and left to swing in the wind, don't they sometimes, Senator Cudaback? And I watch these things and not only have I never done it and will never do it, I've come to the aid of those to whom I've seen it done and I have condemned that kind of practice. I don't do those things to my colleagues that some of the rest of these elitist senators have done and will continue to do because they think they can trick somebody and take advantage of their naivete'. That is not how I operate. Senator Maurstad, be thankful that you have a man of my caliber with you here.

SENATOR CROSBY: Time. Thank you, Senator Chambers. Senator Landis.

SENATOR LANDIS: Thank you, Mrs. Speaker. I'm not thankful for anything at this moment, given the nature of the discussion. It shouldn't surprise us that Senator Chambers, as a member who understands the frustrations of being a member of a minority, is not deeply committed to making sure that majority rule works well, because majorities have often frustrated and done things which have created difficulties for members of minorities. That is the...that is the tension between majorities and minorities. Yesterday, I think, and the days before we've been talking about taunting and scorning. I think it's going to come down, when rules are attempted to be applied, I think Ernie's already told us that we are going to have our share of taunting and scorning, scorning when that occurs. In fact, our rules are easy to beat. In fact, when Ernie says, you know I'll beat you at these rules, I'll...you'll deliver yourselves into my hands, we've already done it. It's not a big feat. Ernie beats his chest. He doesn't need to. In fact, the rules are written in a way that makes them relatively easy to beat. The only thing it requires is will because all the pieces are there. You just simply have to have the will not to play a collegial, congenial person and all the tools are in the Rule Book to make sure that that happens. We have not written our rules to constrain people very well at all. In fact, we've written our rules to promote
