

money and we couldn't get to the bottom of that either. Following the money would be important. I want to tell you all nobody talked to me. There ain't no big-time gamblers came to me and said anything about gambling. I just believe that people should have the right to vote, and I want to remind you, again, hypocrisy of any of us, any of you, not being boobs or sops, you could be hypocrites. You see on the one hand because we have an issue, for example, that draws a person, I think Ernie is an agnostic and doesn't believe in God and the born again Christian, on the same issue. It's kind of interesting. I don't know about the morality. And then we've got, of course, we've got my beer-drinking, card-playing, golf, Reverend Robinson back here who is also talking about the issue. Oh, Episcopalian, whatever. Well, Episcopalians have known to be human after all, too, on occasion then. Oh, I won't go into any more details but I would like to suggest that, you know, hurting families and the fabric of families, the morality of it all, is accomplished in a lot of ways. For those of you that are concerned about that, let me remind you that when you support legislation that exempts taxes so that the poor homeowner and family person has to pay more property taxes, and when we support industries that make sure they work people only 20 hours a week or 15 hours a week or 30, enough so that they don't have to provide benefits, these poor families are hurt and the morality as it applies to policies that affect them, as far as I'm concerned are no different. If you honestly believe gambling is evil, then the people that employ people under those circumstances are even more evil because they do it intentionally and pocket the profits themselves. Business runs gambling, business also hurts the fabric of our families as well, and I would yield the rest of my time, I've talked too long, to Mr...Senator Will.

SENATOR CROSBY: Senator Will.

SENATOR WILL: Thank you.

SENATOR CROSBY: Two minutes.

SENATOR WILL: Madam President, Senator Schellpeper, would you briefly respond to a question?

SENATOR CROSBY: Senator Schellpeper.
