

problems, why he still thinks that the building of that permanent facility would be necessary. So we... I'm not worried about his amendment. I think it will give us an opportunity to discuss some of these other things. But Senator Lindsay's is out there looming over us right now, you know, the suicide bomber, the one who's willing to destroy everything and himself because it's his way to go out with a bang, so to speak, because he's not going to be here anymore. He doesn't have to pick up these pieces. He can sit at home or in his office, turn on cable and watch me down here struggling, with my little shovel and my little bucket, to pick up what he helped drop on the....

SENATOR BERNARD-STEVENS: You're on a roll, go ahead.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: And since it's my time, I'm going to, that Senator Hartnett gave me, I'm going to continue because I am serious about what I am saying. BY the way, if you give this Quonset hut, you ought to call it the Lindsay...what's his name? The Nelson-Lindsay wing, for the Governor and former Senator Lindsay. But why is it that on other occasions, even though I don't think we spend enough money to really address these problems, we will discuss the lack of adequate jobs? And we talked about welfare reform, there was a lot of discussion about the things that I'm talking about now. And although nothing was done about it, because again it was just so much "yow-yow" to justify throwing these women off welfare after two years, we don't deliver. And during those discussions we talk about all the good that can result if you allow a person to be in a position to earn a living. And we won't even consider raising the minimum wage. We can't even get that issue before us. When the Governor came with his so called crime bill he agreed that a person should be able to earn a living. But when I asked him was raising the minimum wage a part of his package, he said, no, because that's where you have to do something. And there are people out there who have a pool of cheap labor and they don't want to pay a decent wage, so he cow-tows to them because he thinks they'll vote for him or give him some money when he's running. I'm concerned about the people who live day-to-day, not knowing for sure where their next meal is going to come from, where if a child has run over shoes, or holes in the shoes, or inadequate clothing, and yet the child has to go to school, if you can't make it, you'll take it. Jesus justified that. Jesus is the one who took his disciples through a man's cornfield and stole his corn. Jesus is a thief,...
