

are senators who are familiar with parts of it, and there are senators that can probably discuss very thoroughly and give justifications for bits and pieces of it, but it is like that old body that Doctor Frankenstein put together, Adam. You take a little from this body, a little from that one, and you wind up with a monstrosity. But if nobody crosses the monster and just lets him shuffle his way through life, and grunt and growl, and look nasty, then every thing is all right. But if you once let a glimmer of understanding penetrate one of those brain cells and it is transmitted to another, and the monster begins to think that it can think, that it can make some determinations, and that it even has rights, then the monster becomes dangerous. If an attempt is made to do some of the things that are allowed in this bill, with as poor an understanding by those who attempt it,...

SENATOR WILL: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...as there is of those who are fashioning this law, then a problem could be created. But knowing that inertia exists to a great extent throughout this universe, and certainly in government, knowing that change will be resisted, I think it's a bill that is full of plenty of nothing, and I don't look for anything to happen, and I'm still waiting for somebody who believes in this bill to show me what can happen that will result in a reduction in property taxes, other than these two counties getting together and say we are going to cut the assessment by whatever, or the levy by whatever amount. Other than that, the bill is a sham and a hoax, and if you could reduce it to liquid, I'd put it in bottles and use honest labeling and call it snake oil.

SENATOR WILL: Thank you, Senator Chambers. Senator Coordsen.

SENATOR COORDSEN: Thank you, Mr. President, members of the body. I apologize for not speaking on 1085 earlier today but we're just getting things gathered together in our life. LB 1085, I have to admit, and 1085 and the package are certainly unique in that they do something that is heresy in many ways, that we are removing restrictions from local people rather than increasing or putting in place a mandate. It is something unthinkable. Many years ago I used to make a comment from time to time when someone would talk about those people, referencing the electorate of the state of Nebraska, those people needed us
