

put out this advertisement not too long ago that you are not safe walking from your house to your car, because you might be mugged or raped. We have got enough "Repelicans" in this body along with my vote to adopt this amendment. Where are those "Repelicans" who support that attitude that we should be concerned about victims? Forget about this hardhearted, worthless Democrats, forget them. Me and the "Repelicans" can do this. We will lead the way. We will take the moral high ground. We will show concern for these victims. I looked back at Senator Wehrbein and he is having a conversation with Senator Cap Dierks probably about LB 105 (sic) and some water issue, water under the ground, and we are talking about people walking, trying to walk and recover. And we can't get $73,000 out of this body. It shouldn't be harder to get that, Senator Jensen, than to get blood out of a turnip. You are concerned about victims. I know that. And I know that when you talk to the chamber of commerce or any group they would applaud you for saying you voted $73,000 to help rape and domestic violence victims. They wouldn't drum you out of that room. As a matter of fact, and I am off Senator Jensen now, we ought to all kind of touch up our image with these little piddling amounts so that we can look moral and righteous and say that we voted for those things we were sent down there for. We are compassionate people. We voted $73,000. However, since that is all that...

SENATOR COORDSEN PRESIDING

SENATOR COORDSEN: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...Senator Bernard-Stevens has in his amendment, I applaud those who will do no more than what we ought to do. But I certainly think the next time we hear that song, To Dream the Impossible Dream, and you hear that song about, to walk into hell, to be willing to march into hell for a heavenly cause, we won't sing that. We won't be the ones who stroll with our last ounce of courage to dream the impossible dream, to reach the unreachable star. Senator Brown, wouldn't it be wonderful if we could sing that song and really mean it? Vote for this and it is a step toward it. No, I can't sing, and my singing would be enough excuse for some people to vote against this amendment, so I'm not going to do that.

SENATOR COORDSEN: Thank you, Senator Chambers. Before we proceed, I would like to announce that Senator Schmitt has
