

bill. There is no way to stop it from advancing. It is essential in the minds of most people that this bill be enacted into law and I'm sure that nobody's going to lose any sleep over the fact that we're giving this blood money by cutting corners to that Constitutional Revision Commission; that a couple of my good friends on the floor folded and threw in the towel because they are tired and it doesn't really matter one way or the other anymore, but I want them to know that I forgive them. My job is to be aware of the frailties that human beings are all subjected to, to overlook those frailties, take them into consideration and not have a negative reaction to people who give in to them. But if a point can be reached when we get to Select File where we will look at the information on the Quonset huts, there might be a chance to strike all of that money but, if not all of it, perhaps half of it. Why spend money for a medication if the one who prescribed it, meaning the physician, the one who filled the prescription, meaning the pharmacist, the one who winds up administering it might mean the nurse who comes to help you will each tell you the same thing--this is not going to cure what ails you? So then, as the patient, you ask, well, why are you giving it to me? Because we can and you will take it if we give it to you. This that is being done by the Legislature in this appropriation bill is in the nature of a placebo. It is not going to solve the problem of overcrowding. It is a political maneuver and it is payback by Senator Lindsay to the Governor for helping him lose his run for the Douglas County Board. The Governor knew what he was doing when he said, Senator Lindsay has helped me do a lot of things while he was in the Legislature; without him I couldn't do this or that. So the voters in Douglas County say, well, if he helps the Governor so much he ought to stay there and keep helping him; we're not going to deprive the Governor of this help and put Senator Lindsay on the Douglas County Board. Now, I don't think the Governor did that on purpose, but if you think about it and he did have somebody here helping him so much would he want to lose that assistance? Certainly not. But Senator Lindsay, being the kind of person learning from me how to take into consideration frailties and failings, he forgives the Governor and is going to give the Governor a tool to assist him in his run for the U.S. Senate. He'll be able to say, now you can walk to your door in safety from your car because we have two Quonset huts at the penitentiary. Every problem of crime is solved now because we have two Quonset huts, and everything is well with the world. The Governor should go on to Washington, DC, and everybody in
