

SPEAKER WITHEM: Senator.

SENATOR JENSEN: Glad to.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: I didn't even call a name. (Laughter.) Well, as old folks used to say, the first hen that cackled laid the egg. You got it right though, Senator Jensen. Come on.

SPEAKER WITHEM: Senator Jensen, do you care to respond?

SENATOR JENSEN: Oh, boy, you step into one.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Senator Jensen, see, if all wealthy people were as good humored as Senator Jensen, we would be a much better world. But, Senator Jensen, how much, how much of an investment would a person have to have, if you can kind of average it out, to produce an, in excess of $10,000 a year in this unearned income? What do you think the...?

SENATOR JENSEN: Well, I don't know. I've never been fortunate enough to have that Berkshire-Hathaway stock that some people have that returns a much higher percentage. But, you know, certainly 6, 7 percent, somewhere in there, is what your return should be. And so you can figure out what that would be.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Well,...

SENATOR JENSEN: And, mind, you pay taxes on that anyway.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: If...in law, if you have a trust, the substance or the thing of the trust is some times called the corpus, so what value would the corpus have which would produce $10,000 in unearned income?

SENATOR JENSEN: I could figure that out.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Oh, okay, I mean you couldn't just give a rough estimate? Just rough.

SENATOR JENSEN: I'd prefer not to.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Okay, thank you. And I'm not looking in his money bags. We could be talking about Warren Buffet. I'll tell
