

SENATOR LINDSAY: Senator Brashear, would you respond?

SENATOR BRASHEAR: Yes, Senator Chambers.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Senator Brashear, if the state does not offer these bribes to Union Pacific, they're going to pick up the headquarters and go to Missouri or wherever else they scared you all to death about. Where did they tell you, you all, they would go to? Missouri and where else? I could tell them where to go, but they wouldn't get any benefits there. But they'd get their just desserts. Where did they tell you they're going to run to?

SENATOR BRASHEAR: They haven't indicated that they were going to run anywhere.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: I thought we had a piece of paper that was handed out...

SENATOR BRASHEAR: We've had several.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...telling us that the likelihood of them going to Missouri or someplace else is very great.

SENATOR BRASHEAR: That's the sheet entitled the "The Tale of Two Behemoths," the bottom box.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Two Behemoths. I'm glad they didn't say two "Bethshemoths." But at any rate, there is something on here, isn't it, that tells us where they're likely to go?

SENATOR BRASHEAR: In the bottom box it talks about the competition of other states. It's been publicly reported that both Colorado and Missouri are interested in, and of course, you'd have to be asleep to not know that railroads with which they have consolidated have substantial holdings in those states, and therefore those states are competitors.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: So they...they've got you believe that, believing that they're going to run off to Colorado or Missouri if this bill doesn't pass.

SENATOR BRASHEAR: No, sir, they do not. They have me believing that it's in our best interest and the best interest of our
