

it. Certainly informa...I suspect, as Senator Landis mentions, tons of paper and no convictions. But has it had...has the fact that that paper has to get filed kept people from going up and signing their name to something? Does the fact that we have a signature book at every retail location, where somebody shows their ID, then they have to sign a book, does that say, wait a second, there's a little too much trail, paper trail for me to be coming in buying beer for minors? If that party gets crashed, do I want a traceable keg or an untraceable keg? And that's...so I question, I don't know what some of the other figures are. Has there been a decrease in the number of kegs sold or from minors getting busted? I don't know that. So we need to know, I guess, has that occurred? Has there been a decrease in the number of kegs sold to minors or found by police at minors' parties? Have those...as Senator Landis mentioned, they haven't traced any back, but was there a deterrent value there? And that's, I guess, questions that I would have. And, as you know, I've got a concern about the underlying bill regardless. But I guess this adds steam or at least gives me more things to talk about. But it's something that, I guess regardless of how you feel about brewpubs, ought to get a comfort level with this particular issue also.

PRESIDENT ROBAK: Thank you, Senator Lindsay. Senator Lindsay, are you ready to address your amendment, or...

SENATOR LINDSAY: Yeah, if there's nothing else going on it, then, yes, Madam President.

PRESIDENT ROBAK: There are other speakers to the original, if you are not...

SENATOR LINDSAY: Oh, then let...go with the other speakers, because the copies...I think the Pages had to run downstairs to get the copies. So I'd....

PRESIDENT ROBAK: In that case, Senator Pirsch, your light is next.

SENATOR PIRSCH: Thank you, Madam President, members of the body. I had great reservations about doing this kind of thing at this late hour. And the more I look at this amendment the more I believe this is something that we should not do. I was here, Senator Lindsay, when the brewpubs were first established.
