see the reality around them being drastically different from these things that they have been taught, but since they were taught these things by people they were trained to respect, they want to believe that what they were taught is correct. So this battle is waged within them and some people cannot survive it. Rather than be in a world where their mind is constantly divided, they decide that it is better not to be here at all. We know these things, and I've mentioned this before, there is such a high rate of suicide that some of these card companies are producing cards that can be sent. They're tastefully written, supposedly, to families who lose a member to suicide. When a large commercial enterprise begins to follow a course to make money, you should be sure that they are not going to be ahead of the curve, to use another cliché. They are looking at a trend in society, and one that has become so entrenched...

SENATOR CROSBY: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...that their tailgating on it is not going to turn society off with them and hurt their ability to make money, and these cards are selling. So what does that have to do with what I'm talking about? It has every thing to do with it. Life, really, is like a seamless web. What hits the web on the far left side will be transmitted to the far right side. However, and I know when I pointed I pointed in opposite direction from what I was saying, that's to see if anybody is paying attention. Obviously, nobody was, but it...because it would have been the hooting and the laughing, ah-ha, we got you. But the final point that I want to try to make I will have to make not at this point because I think my time is up.

SENATOR CROSBY: Thank you, Senator Chambers. Senator Kristensen.

SPEAKER KRISTENSEN: Thank you, Madam President. I have had a few conversations with members on the floor and so I want to just try to give you a little more of what I think the insight might be as to what the product would be of this. On a number of the provisions in the constitution, they do write in newer style, in the last, probably in the fifties, sixties, seventies, and somewhat into the eighties, the style appeared to be put "he" or "she" at every point. Well, that becomes difficult,
