everything's different because we have computers and everything in the courthouse? The courthouse is still probably the most political entity in this state and in the country. The courthouse is political and those people in the courthouse, who are elected by each one of us, have a lot of political pressures. You think we have them here. You go over and be county treasurer or county clerk or the assessor. Be the assessor for awhile and see the kind of pressures you get. So that's my two points. It would cost the counties more. We must be sure that the counties want to pay that. The second thing is that I don't think that we should burden our county official or our treasurer that way. So, aside from the fact that I'm...I think the daily newspaper is the quickest and easiest way to publish it, I want you to think about those people in the courthouse. And I'm...you can tell how old I am. I still call it the courthouse. I don't call it the city-county building. It's the courthouse. Thank you.

SPEAKER KRISTENSEN: Senator Wickersham.

SENATOR WICKERSHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been listening to folks say that they support the Byars amendment and that's good. They get up and speak their minds. But, frankly, I'm confused about part of what I'm hearing. This is not a new mandate, is not a new mandate. It is an option for the counties to act in the way that they see is the most flexible and responsible in their counties. There must be a new wind blowing in this Chamber today, a new wind blowing. Over the last three years, we have passed bill, after bill, after bill that allowed more flexibility to local officials in a variety of areas to be efficient and effective. There's still a few of those bills around this year. A new wind is blowing, a new wind: No, local officials, we're not going to allow you to find the ways to be most efficient and effective. We know how to do it for you. It's the way we've always done it and that, by golly, is the way we're going to continue to do it. A new wind--the way we've always done it, the best way, and you can't figure out how to do it any better and if we let you choose you'll make the wrong choice. A new wind. Now, is this about less notice? No. It might be notice to whom. That's an interesting question, notice to whom. Is it important that I have notice that Senator Peterson has delinquent taxes? I'm not going to pay them for
