objection to gambling, so you don't even have to pay attention to what I'm saying now in terms of having to answer a question because I just want to, whenever I get the opportunity, express my opposition to state-sponsored gambling. There have been connections made between the rash of bank robbing that is occurring, mainly in Omaha, but I understand it's spreading to other parts of the state, not only are banks being robbed now, but various types of commercial establishments. Connections are being made between those robberies and people with gambling problems. The problem develops for a gambler when debts are accumulated which cannot be paid. So you have to get money from somewhere. You cannot get it from the alluring places that this state tries to encourage people to go into, so you have to go someplace else, and you take the gun with you. And we're going to make it possible for more people to have more guns, legally. So somebody who can carry that gun might happen to walk by a bank and say, wait a minute, I've got what I need here, I'm going to go get me some money. And Willy the Actor Sutton, a notorious, infamous, but in some circles famous bank robber, would be captured for having robbed banks, locked up, and he also was an escape artist. And when he was asked why he continued to rob the banks, since he'd always ultimately wind up back in prison, he said, banks are where the money is. And that is true. These types of bills that Senator Schellpeper is offering today don't go directly to whether or not state gambling out to be sanctioned. He's trying to deal with an existing set of circumstances, and that's why I'm not trying to involve him in this discussion. But I think it is terribly wrong for the state, knowing the evils of gambling, to be the house, or to be the one sponsoring it to spend money to put up advertisements and billboards, to encourage people to gamble. Yet these same politicians... Ben Nelson was no different. The man that I call Mickey is no different. They will talk, and talk, and chatter, and chatter about values this, values that, and the children, then make it crystal clear that the state is underwriting and supporting one of the most damaging activities that can engage in a society where there is a gross, inequitable distribution of wealth, where you have extremely rich people, on one hand, extremely poor people on the other, and some in the middle who don't realize that they're a half step and a sneeze from being poor themselves. Gambling is always presented as the way to make the quick fix, the way to hit the jackpot. Yet the
